2 Learned counsel submits that the petitioner seeks a direction to Parliament to enact a law providing a uniform scheme of compensation for persons who are affected by violence and other tragedies. The law on the point is well-settled. No mandamus can be issued to Parliament as a legislating body to enact legislation. The prayers are hence misconceived. Moreover, whether any scheme should at all be framed by the executive is a matter of policy. We, therefore, decline to entertain the petition under Article 32 of the Constitution.

3 The Petition is dismissed.
